

EAST PARK

Spofford Railway at The Highland Way

The Spofford Railway was a narrow-gauge railway that operated in the area of Spofford, Scotland, from 1862 to 1962. It was built to transport coal from the Spofford Colliery to the Highland Railway at Spofford. The railway was a single-track line and was used for passenger services until 1962. The railway was a popular route for tourists and was used for the Spofford Railway Festival, which was held annually from 1962 to 1967. The railway was a significant part of the local economy and was used for the transport of coal, timber, and other goods. The railway was a popular route for tourists and was used for the Spofford Railway Festival, which was held annually from 1962 to 1967. The railway was a significant part of the local economy and was used for the transport of coal, timber, and other goods.

Spofford Railway

The Spofford Railway was a narrow-gauge railway that operated in the area of Spofford, Scotland, from 1862 to 1962. It was built to transport coal from the Spofford Colliery to the Highland Railway at Spofford. The railway was a single-track line and was used for passenger services until 1962. The railway was a popular route for tourists and was used for the Spofford Railway Festival, which was held annually from 1962 to 1967. The railway was a significant part of the local economy and was used for the transport of coal, timber, and other goods.

