

LONDESBOROUGH

An East Yorkshire Estate Village

Londeston is a small village in the East Yorkshire district of the City of York. It is situated on the River Ouse, which flows through the village and into the North Sea. The village is known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

The village is also known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

The village is also known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

The village is also known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

The village is also known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

The village is also known for its historic buildings, including the 15th-century church of St. Andrew, and its proximity to the River Ouse, which is a popular spot for fishing and boating.

